International Conference

“What Is a Good University”

18-3-2014 at Hilton Hotel, Ha Noi

VSN, Vietnam Scholar Network, is a network of multidisciplinary researchers in Vietnam. This is our first annual conference, and we are honored to be joined as co-organizers by The National University Hanoi, School of Education, Vietnam Center for Economic Policy and Research (VEPR), and sponsored by the British Embassy.

The central theme of this year’s conference is on the idea of a “good university”. Across the globe and over generations, the creation and development of a good higher education system has been key to the strength of nations. Vietnam, in particular, faces important and intensifying challenges in providing our young people with the kind of education they deserve.

At this event, we hope to bring together a group of scholars, educators, policy makers, patient observers, and compassionate thinkers, who have over the years been involved in different episodes of the rise and fall of many universities and higher education institutions in Vietnam.

The focus of this conference is sharing experiences, insights, and ideals of what we should and could hope to design Vietnam’s future university architecture. Another objective is to encourage the creation of networks, and strengthen the ties of courageous innovators for a better education system in Vietnam.

Discussion sessions, include:

1) University admission: who deserves what and why,
2) University governance,
3) Doing research in a university,
4) The firm and the university,
5) The university and the Government,
6) Higher education and technology.
